A ROMANCE OF THREE CITIES.

The Trouble Started in London, Was Continued by Publications at New York and Reached a Climax in the Press at a San Francisco Bank.

It is a story of the lives of two men, John W. Mackay and John D. Rockefeller, who were once friends and rivals. The story begins in London, where Mackay was a successful businessman. He was known for his wealth and his philanthropic efforts. Rockefeller, on the other hand, was a more reserved man, but he was also a powerful force in the financial world.

Mackay is an Englishman by birth, but he has made his fortune in America. He is a man of great energy and ambition. Rockefeller, on the other hand, is an American by birth, but he has made his fortune in England. He is a man of great energy and ambition.

While preparations were being made for Mrs. Mackay's presentation at court, and for the wedding of her daughter, Mrs. Mackay, the aristocratic people of the English capital were deluged with copies of a New York weekly in which appeared a scandalous and cruel "expose" of the family. The article charged that Mrs. Mackay had been divorced from her first husband, and therefore was not eligible for introduction to the queen. It went even further, and declared that Mrs. Mackay's father was a murderer, and had "done time" in a western penitentiary.

A copy of the paper, evidently by intent reached Earl DeLaware, the father of Viscount Cantelupo. The aged nobleman promptly sent his son on a voyage round the world and canceled the engagement. The publication naturally created a huge flutter, especially as it came right on the heels of a printed discussion regarding Mrs. Mackay's origin and antecedents.

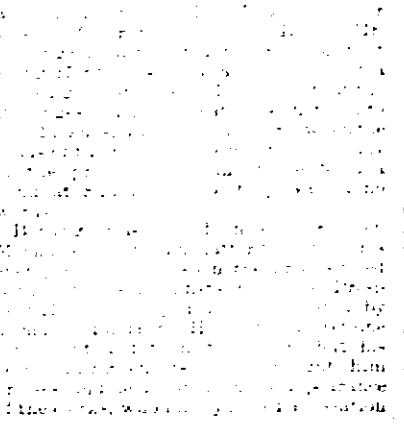

Next there arrived, also from New York, a book entitled "Mrs. Jonathan Abbott," which purporting to give the "facts" about the women from America who have gained social distinction in Europe. The name of Mrs. Mackay is highly laudatory; that of Mrs. Bonnyne is entirely the reverse.

While all this "insane" family history was being discussed, or, to be more accurate, some time previous to the latest developments, the following was printed, evidently by the sanction of the Pall Mall Gazette.

Some comment has appeared in the press concerning Mrs. Mackay during the last few weeks that a representative sought the truth from Mrs. Mackay. The result was a long and interesting interview, in which she gave a detailed account of her life and her relationship with John W. Mackay.

The publication naturally created a huge flutter, especially as it came right on the heels of a printed discussion regarding Mrs. Mackay's origin and antecedents.

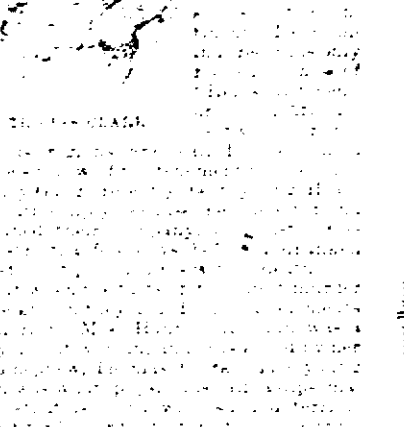

Next there arrived, also from New York, a book entitled "Mrs. Jonathan Abbott," which purporting to give the "facts" about the women from America who have gained social distinction in Europe. The name of Mrs. Mackay is highly laudatory; that of Mrs. Bonnyne is entirely the reverse.

While all this "insane" family history was being discussed, or, to be more accurate, some time previous to the latest developments, the following was printed, evidently by the sanction of the Pall Mall Gazette.

Some comment has appeared in the press concerning Mrs. Mackay during the last few weeks that a representative sought the truth

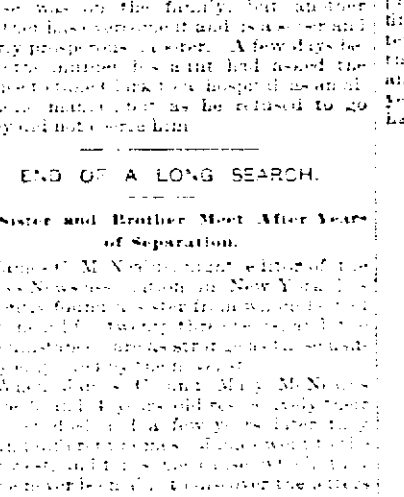

from Mrs. Mackay. The result was a long and interesting interview, in which she gave a detailed account of her life and her relationship with John W. Mackay.

It is a story of the lives of two men, John W. Mackay and John D. Rockefeller, who were once friends and rivals. The story begins in London, where Mackay was a successful businessman. He was known for his wealth and his philanthropic efforts. Rockefeller, on the other hand, was a more reserved man, but he was also a powerful force in the financial world.

Mackay is an Englishman by birth, but he has made his fortune in America. He is a man of great energy and ambition. Rockefeller, on the other hand, is an American by birth, but he has made his fortune in England. He is a man of great energy and ambition.

While preparations were being made for Mrs. Mackay's presentation at court, and for the wedding of her daughter, Mrs. Mackay, the aristocratic people of the English capital were deluged with copies of a New York weekly in which appeared a scandalous and cruel "expose" of the family. The article charged that Mrs. Mackay had been divorced from her first husband, and therefore was not eligible for introduction to the queen. It went even further, and declared that Mrs. Mackay's father was a murderer, and had "done time" in a western penitentiary.

A copy of the paper, evidently by intent reached Earl DeLaware, the father of Viscount Cantelupo. The aged nobleman promptly sent his son on a voyage round the world and canceled the engagement. The publication naturally created a huge flutter, especially as it came right on the heels of a printed discussion regarding Mrs. Mackay's origin and antecedents.
